

Saturday June 2, 2007 Colgate University, Hamilton, NY

The New Systems Biology: Asking Big Questions Across Disciplines and Institutions

Ralph Quatrano Spencer T. Olin Professor and Chairman of Biology, Washington University and Ken Belanger, Associate Professor of Biology, Colgate University

In 2004, Colgate and Washington Universities were awarded a $5 million grant by the National Science Foundation to investigate how cells respond to specific environmental stresses and to incorporate undergraduate students from both institutions into these investigations. Quatrano and Belanger (Co-Principal Investigators) will speak to the connections that brought Colgate and Washington University together on this grant, to the science that is resulting from this collaboration, and to the ways that this program has impacted the opportunities available for Colgate students and faculty.